

Leah is the Chief Investment Officer (CIO) of InBC Investment Corp., a strategic investment fund with $500 million to invest with a mandate that values people, planet and profit. InBC invests in growing companies and venture funds to generate financial returns alongside measurable economic, social and environmental impacts for British Columbia.

Leah has experience building high-performing, mission-driven teams that leverage technology and innovation to drive sustainable, inclusive solutions and deliver remarkable human outcomes. Prior to her current role, Leah was Investment Director for the TELUS Pollinator Fund for Good, where she helped launch one of the world's largest corporate impact funds with $100 million to invest in change-making solutions. Leah was previously a management consultant with Accenture and a project manager at Lululemon Athletica.

Leah is active in the start-up and investor ecosystem, dedicates time to mentoring entrepreneurs and aspiring VCs, and is passionate about supporting individuals of diverse backgrounds while giving back to her local communities. She is a member of the Canadian Impact Investing Working Group, has an advisory role with the Squamish Nation Wealth Secretariat and was on the 50 Nomination Committee of the Canadian Venture & Private Equity Association (CVCA). She has participated on numerous private sector and community boards.

Leah has a business degree from Simon Fraser University.
